

1.What are requirements candidates? Why should they not be treated as final requirements immediately?

Ans: Requirements candidates are preliminary or initial requirements identified during the elicitation process. They are ideas, needs, or expectations collected from stakeholders but are not yet finalized or validated.

They should not be treated as final requirements immediately because they may contain misunderstandings, conflicts, duplicates, or incomplete information. After elicitation, requirements must be analyzed, validated, prioritized, and refined before being approved as final requirements. Treating them as final too early may lead to system errors and rework.

2. Explain the role of stakeholders and mention any two risks of missing key stakeholders.

Ans: Explain the role of stakeholders and mention any two risks of missing key stakeholders.